Language is important to all humans and its affects the way we express our thoughts, express emotions, perform tasks and engage in relationships. If you are learning a language or growing your existing skills this type of software will help you with more than just basic grammar, vocabulary and useful sentences. I`ve been looking for a software like this for a very long time, I`ve tried many of them but they just do not compare to this one. I`ll skip the features and move straight to the pros, the cons I have found are the support. The support isnt that good, you`ll get a lot of help with the basics but if you need anything more complex or buy anything from the shop you`ll just get helpless help like “go to this website” with no answers and nothing more. The support I've gotten was by TCHAR which is great to help you for basic issues with the program but they simply do not know how to help you with more complex issues. Also their website has no support, there is no forum etc and no documentation of any kind, there is only a link to their website, the menus are simply not good and after you buy their customer support is non-existent. Well if you are looking for a simple yet extremely useful tool to help you learn new languages then this is definitely it. On a personal note, I would never recommend this software to anybody, I've tried so many ways to learn this language and have never found anything like this. Q: Why is order of GET params not deterministic? Why is the order of GET parameters not deterministic? For example: Is it because of the TCP connection? Should GET requests always be deterministic? A: The answer is 'yes' it is not deterministic in the sense that it is not predictable because of the initial connection between the client and the server. It can vary. What your browser sends is based on its configuration, connection details, and even network traffic. Sometimes the exact same request can be made by the browser and sometimes the exact same request can be made by another browser or OS. The standard for HTTP does not guarantee any particular order, it only guarantees the application on the web server can determine the order of the parameters sent. Of course, there are other factors involved and the server might still determine the order. For example, some web servers prefer that their parameters be in an order consistent with the normal course of processing a page on the server. A: From RFC2616 (HTTP/1.1): 2.2.3. Requests The request-line is the first (and only) URI-reference in a Request-Line. A request-line consists of a method token and a request-target. The method token consists of the method name followed by a single colon (":") and a space. The target is a URI-reference consisting of a scheme component, a colon (":"), and a path component. client dev tun proto udp remote 194
