As the nation braces for another mass shooting, a new poll shows that nearly six in 10 Americans say the U.S. gun laws and mental health care system should be changed in light of school shootings such as the one that killed 17 students and teachers at a Florida high school last month. In the wake of the mass shooting, a Quinnipiac University Polling Institute national survey released on Tuesday found that 70 percent of American voters favor tightening background checks of those buying guns, including 70 percent of both Republicans and Democrats. More than six in 10 Americans say gun laws and mental health care should be changed in light of the Florida school shooting on Feb. 14. Among the voters surveyed, six in 10 say that there are too many guns in the U.S., and over two-thirds say that guns are too easy to get in the U.S. The poll also shows that nearly 70 percent of all voters want leaders of the National Rifle Association to face tougher gun laws, and that a slim majority of Americans blame the NRA for the slaughter of children at the Florida high school on the same day NRA officials met with Trump in Trump Tower. The Florida school shooting is the deadliest school shooting by a gunman since the Columbine shootings in 1999, where 13 people were killed and dozens were wounded. The shooting took place in a rural area of the U.S. state of Florida near the Florida-Georgia border, about 30 miles northwest of Orlando. The gunman was identified as identified as Nikolas Cruz, a 19-year-old former student at the school. Cruz's mother died of a drug overdose in September. Cruz's aunt told CBS News on Tuesday that he had been hospitalized for failing to heed warnings about his erratic behavior, although she did not confirm whether she was referring to the shooting. The armed school resource officer on duty was not armed when he confronted the shooter, according to the Broward County Sheriff's Office. An officer who was not on duty then entered the building but never fired at the shooter. Trump called the school shooting an "act of cowardice" on Twitter on Wednesday, and spoke at the White House about the shooting on Tuesday. "The fact of this day that our children are now filling up the cemetery, we should say that for two reasons," Trump said. "Number one, the families and friends of the victims are left with the unbearable weight of profound loss. And I know that's a
