I want to perform operations on a number of fast-changing control variables in a loop in Python. My plan for that was to convert those variables into tuples and make the loop sequentially while in any one loop iteration I change only one of the tuple fields. The problem is that, when I try that, I find Python doesn't keep track of that I've changed one tuple-field. The next loop iteration moves on without waiting for the previous one to finish (i.e., it seems to happen in parallel) How do I make sure that the operations are performed sequentially instead? What I'm trying to do is to implement a form of Matrix inversion that keeps on iterating until a certain criterion is met. MEDITERRANEAN — A BAYINIS-FLOW — ITERATORS I see that I have to find a way of keeping the state of the list as follows, considering that I need to handle different algorithms for different algorithms, different subsets of my data (labels are different for each algorithm). MEDITERRANEAN — a BAYINIS-FLOW — ALGORITHMS — LABELS The operations to be performed are (a+b)/2
