The Latest: Rescuers dive into Silver Lake in Colorado The Latest: Rescuers dive into Silver Lake in Colorado For a second day in a row, Boulder County officials reported that they had found human remains in a Silver Lake home. Boulder County Sheriff Joe Pelle was joined by divers on Wednesday by a team of experts that entered the house on Tuesday to determine whether the remains are those of two 6-year-old boys who went missing more than two weeks ago. The remains were found in a bathtub inside the house on a hillside. Pelle said that the remains were found in a bathtub, and not in the basement, as he had said previously. There were no obvious signs of foul play. The sheriff said the house was searched several times before it was entered. The children lived about a mile away. An autopsy on the remains has not been performed, because a search warrant for the remains prohibits releasing the information until the coroner's office completes a "Toxicology Report and Personal Identity Certificate." The initial search warrant provided by the sheriff was signed in part by Pelle, who is not authorized to sign search warrants himself. He said that he had not signed off on the order, but that he was told by a judge that the judge had authorized the move. "As in many instances, his attorney was out of the office and the judge was on the bench and they didn't get the paperwork to him," Pelle said. The search took about 40 minutes, and the sheriff said that he was surprised that it took as long as it did. The house is believed to have been searched about a dozen times already. The two children were last seen July 6. Their mother, who was not identified, was charged with child abuse after deputies found scratches on the children. On Tuesday, the sheriff said he was certain that the remains were those of the missing boys, and that he was looking to find out whether they had been hidden in the house. "I believe we have found their bodies, in so many words, but there are some things we need to do before we can say so for sure," Pelle said.Q: How to handle "Mixed Content" in meta refresh and css? O Governo quer pôr fim às restrições de consumo que se prolongam nos serviços públicos e ao nível de ações entre empresas e fornecedores. O ministro da Economia, Pedro Siza Vieira, disse esta quinta-feira que as decisões administrativas de abertura de concursos, até hoje mantidas, mostravam que as restrições eram "uma política desastrosa". A proposta do Governo, apresentada ainda no ano passado, foi negada pelos três principais partidos, dizendo que "não havia vontade política" em levar a cabo este tipo de medidas. Apoiantes do novo entendimento, o presidente da Assembleia da República e líder do PSD, o socialista Rui Rio, defendeu hoje que os serviços públicos devem ser de livre circulação. "O que, de repente, apareceu como uma espécie de guerra da concorrência, uma guerra em que chegou ao fim todos os subsídios, como uma selva, está a fazer crescer, está a meter o país nessa guerra", disse Rio. O secretário de Estado dos Assuntos Fiscais disse hoje estar convencido de que o Governo "deve avançar", admitindo que o primeiro impacto será ouvir os construtores e os empresários e, depois, os trabalhadores. "Qualquer adiamento acabará por prejudicar os serviços públicos", afirmou. Siza Vieira vai tentar convencer o presidente da República, Cavaco Silva, a mandar uma lei para que as estritas restrições de conc
