The Pen The _pen tool_ (Shift+P) is part of the selection toolset. The Pen tool lets you create simple paths for vector images. You can create closed shapes, like rounded rectangles, or you can create open shapes, which look like letters. Chapter 15, offers more information about the Pen tool. The type of path you create is determined by your canvas settings. You can also make a selection and then convert it to a path. However, you might find that many of the features in the Paths panel (Windows → Paths) are covered in Chapter 15.

The Pencil The _pencil tool_ (Ctrl+P) is similar to the Pen tool. The two tools have similar controls; the difference is that the Pen tool creates a path and the pencil tool creates a hatch. A hatch is a "stroked" line, as shown in Figure 6-11. The hatch can be open or closed, just like a paintbrush stroke, and you can control hatch size and line color in the same way. To create a hatch with the pencil tool, you create a closed shape and then select Paths → Stroke. You'll find that the Stroke menu works much like other menus discussed later in this section. In other words, the Stroke menu is one of the most useful on the palette. Figure 6-11. A hatch is a line just like a pen stroke, except that it has a fixed width. However, a hatch
