Limitations of the use of heparin in the treatment of umbilical cord and placental blood. To test the influence of heparin in the extracorporeal treatment of umbilical cord blood, and of placental blood and its possible byproducts on the clotting system of whole blood. Study of the influence of the extractions of umbilical cord blood, of placental blood and of its byproducts on the activated partial thromboplastin time (APTT), on the Prothrombin time (PT) and on the Thrombin

Time (TT). In the umbilical cord blood, the APTT was influenced by the heparin dose: in samples treated with 1000 U/ml, the values were prolonged (by 7.5 sec, $P = 0.002$), whereas in samples treated with 2000 U/ml they were shortened (by 5.2 sec, $P = 0.004$). There was no difference in samples treated with 500 U/ml. The influence of the heparin dose on the APTT was similar in samples treated with 10%, 20% and 50% of placental blood, but, in the presence of 100% of placental blood, the values for the samples treated with 500 U/ml of heparin were shortened, whereas in the samples treated with 2000 U/ml they were prolonged. In the presence of placental blood, the values for the samples treated with 2000 U/ml of heparin were prolonged and for those treated with 500 U/ml were shortened. The influence of the heparin dose on the APTT was similar in samples treated with 100% and 50% of placental blood byproducts; however, the values for the samples treated with 500 U/ml of heparin were shortened and in those treated with 1000 U/ml they were prolonged. There was no difference in the values of the PT and TT in all the different samples. Extractions of placental blood and its byproducts prolong the APTT. The influence of heparin dose in the treatment of placental blood and its byproducts, on the APTT, depends on the concentration
