I have this kind of fiber: The resolution (the number of the point along the fiber) is determined by the resolution, and the SNR by the resolution and the fibers length. The spectrum at middle row is a real spectrum of the fiber. So, what is this proton in the fiber? I have this kind of spectrum at the bottom: I have done several measures, but all of them have end this problem. I can't understand how the proton emits a single spectral line. Can you please give me an explanation of this? A: The phenomenon you are seeing is known as Rayleigh scattering. A proton is a particle with an atomic nucleus and a bunch of electron bound to it. Rayleigh scattering simply refers to the fact that when a single electron in a atom encounters a particle (atom or nucleus) with a different charge state, it can be excited (transferred an energy level). If the charge on the atom is equal and opposite to the charge of the hit particle, the transfer of energy makes the atom oscillate, but, in general, it will oscillate up or down the energy level it is on. When it oscillates down it will emit radiation, and this is what is happening in the image. New metastatic potential of human breast carcinoma cells during neoadjuvant cytotoxic drug treatment.
